Pearl of the Gulf — لؤلؤة الخليج

A long time ago, people in Kuwait lived simple lives. They worked hard every day to support their families. There were no big shops, cars, or modern buildings. People used to live in houses made of clay and palm trees. Life was not easy, but it was full of meaning, cheerful moments, and cooperation. Most men had jobs that kept them away from home for weeks or months. Some men worked as fishermen or pearl divers, while others were traders. They travelled in wooden boats called dhows, to sell goods such as spices, dates, and clothing. These traders helped Kuwait connect with other countries. Women stayed at home, but they also worked. They cooked food, made clothes, and raised children. Many women made crafts from palm leaves, like baskets and fans. These handmade crafts were useful and beautiful. Children did not go to modern schools. They studied at Al Katateeb, where they learned the Holy Quran and how to read and write. Art was part of this simple life. People used to express their feelings and share their stories through drawing, painting, poetry and music. Art helped keep their traditions alive and passed them on to others. Today, museums, stories, and traditional festivals remind us of the value of our heritage. Just like pearls are treasures from the sea, our stories and culture are treasures from the past.
